- The new year for the program begins on April 1st.
 - Sharon will share contact information with Marci of some folks who could provide locally grown produce in case vendors are looking for that. Some of these producers may also like to become vendors.

- J&J mini mart in Rufus is signed and trained as a new FVRx vendor.
- Participants who were involved in the program last year will need to renew their eligibility if they wish to continue this year.
- This year, participants will be asked to take a pre and post- program survey. This will help collect data about the effectiveness of the program to improve health outcomes.
- Marci is hoping to find 10 households who would like to participate in an online nutrition education component. There could be an opportunity for participants to receive one-on-one counseling with Cindy Brown of OHSU extension, using the Cooking Matter or Food Hero curriculum.
- Transportation to FVRx vendors is still a barrier for some participants. Carrie Silcox at the Sherman County Senior Center would have information on when seniors might like to take the shuttle to access vendors.
